Synopsis book

A wayward young woman abandons her magazine career to learn the old ways of butchery and discover what it means to take life into her own hands

Camas Davis was at an unhappy crossroads. A longtime magazine writer and editor in the food world, she'd returned to her home state of Oregon with her boyfriend from New York City to take an appealing job at a Portland lifestyle magazine. But neither job nor boyfriend delivered on her dreams, and in the span of a year, Davis was unemployed, on her own, with nothing to fall back on. Disillusioned by the years she'd spent mediating the lives of others for a living, she had no idea what to do next. She did know one thing: She no longer wanted to write about the real thing; she wanted to be the real thing. So when a friend told her about Kate Hill, an American woman living in Gascony, France who ran a cooking school and took in strays in exchange for painting fences and making beds, it sounded like just what she needed. She discovered a forgotten

A photograph of a woman from the side and slightly behind. She is wearing a light-colored, ribbed, short-sleeved shirt. Her right hand is tucked into the waistband of her jeans, and her left hand holds a large, antique-style kitchen knife with a wooden handle. She is looking down at the knife. The background is a plain, light-colored wall.
