Synopsis book

Presents exciting, original conclusions about Leonardo da Vincis early life as an artist and amplifies his role in Andrea del Verrocchios studio This groundbreaking reexamination of the beginnings of Leonardo da Vincis (1452-1519) life as an artist suggests new candidates for his earliest surviving work and revises our understanding of his role in the studio of his teacher, Andrea del Verrocchio (1435-1488).

Anchoring this analysis are important yet often overlooked considerations about Verrocchios studio specifically, the collaborative nature of most works that emerged from it and the probability that Leonardo must initially have learned to paint in tempera, as his teacher did. The book searches for the young artists hand among the tempera works from Verrocchios studio and proposes new criteria for judging Verrocchios own painting style. Several paintings are identified here as likely the work of Leonardo, and others long considered works by Verrocchio or his assistant

Presents exciting, original conclusions about Leonardo da Vinci's early life as an artist and amplifies his role in Andrea del Verrocchio's studio This groundbreaking reexamination of the beginnings of Leonardo da Vinci's (1452-1519) life as an artist suggests new candidates for his earliest surviving work and revises our understanding of his role in the studio of his teacher, Andrea del Verrocchio (1435-1488). Anchoring this analysis are important yet often overlooked considerations about Verrocchio's studio specifically, the collaborative nature of most works that emerged from it and the probability that Leonardo must initially have learned to paint in tempera, as his teacher did. The book searches for the young artist's hand among the tempera works from Verrocchio's studio and proposes new criteria for judging Verrocchio's own painting style.
